New Strain On State Nursing Homes: Keep Patients Out Of Hospitals

“At the Fresh River Healthcare nursing home in East Windsor, the chance that a short-stay patient will end up back in the hospital with-in 30 days of arriving at the facility is less than eight percent.”

James Christofori, administrator at Fresh River, said the facility has worked hard to prevent avoidable readmissions by improving the post-acute nursing care it offers and adopting INTERACT.

He said the home has expanded its use of physicians and APRNs (advanced practice registered nurses), focusing on infection prevention and careful antibiotic use.

“All this results in more timely and accurate assessments... and excellent resident outcomes,” he said.
